Craig and Wally build an Igloo near Duck Pass

Duck Pass Base Camp – April 25-27th, 2003

By Randy Lamm (photos by Randy Lamm and Craig Connally)

This trip was originally listed as a three day base camp in the Convict Lake Drainage, but due to a high snow line in that area we moved to a base camp just below Duck Pass from the Coldwater Campground trail head. On Thursday night, Tom Marsh, Mike Rector and I carpooled up to the Convict Lk Campground, arriving at 11pm we met Bill Lutz in the parking lot. It was Cold and windy at Convict, but Bill had been soaking in a new hot pool he found down in Long Valley, so it was decided we would go there to camp. Driving on the Whitmore Road we took the usual first left on to the dirt road and went down it a couple of miles and turned right and went around a mile further. Eventually Bill pulled up to a playa mesa where we parked and got our bags out, but first we had a nice soak in the hot pool - a good way to start a trip. The next morning we met the rest of our group at the Lake Mary Road end. Our group consisted of leader Tom, me assisting, Mike Rector, Bill Lutz, Joe McGuire, Helga Zimmer (Alpha Female #1), and Evelyn McGuire (Alpha Female #2), Wally Drake and Craig Connally. After a 3 hour slog we eventually found a place to camp a little above Barney Lk at about 10,400'. The rest of the day was spent setting up our camp. Tom and I set up our tents, Joe and the Alpha Females set up a megamid. Craig and Wally started work on an Igloo. Craig had brought his special Igloo building tool

~~Sardine Canyon~~ Robinson Basin April 21-22, 2003 by Randy Lamm

This trip was intended to be Sardine Canyon but due to lack of snow, and storm conditions, it was diverted to Robinson Basin instead. Trip Participants included: Tom Marsh (Assistant Leader), Mike Rector, Bill Lutz, Mike Seiffert & Lorene Samoska, Thomas Johannson, Jeremy Cole, Don Pies, Jan St. Amand, Wally Drake and Craig Connally. Most of us arrived Friday nite and set up our car camps in the Upper Greys campground. At 6am we started getting ready to caravan up the road to the OV parking lot. Over the Campground and Owens Valley it was clear, calm and even sunny, but when we got up to the road end it was overcast, cold and breezy. We looked at the dry gully going up the south side of Kearsarge Pk. Then we ran into Bill Lingle, Walt Davie, Bruce Rorty and Bahram who were there as the Alpine Ski Mountaineering Section. The day before, Bill had hiked along the old dirt mining road which runs along the base and hits the OV road on one of the last major switch backs. Bill reported that Sardine Cyn did not have much snow. They were going up Robinson Basin, which is goes up to the southwest from the parking lot. The weather was balmy as the sun came out so we started skinning up the apprx 300' vert slope at the entrance to Robinson basin. The skinning was on frozen windpacked corn and the slope was a steep angle, and was a little challenging. Jeremy dropped out quick at the top of this slope, due to a combination of the slope angle, his expedition grade arctic mountaineering suit, and the 10 beers he had for breakfast. Once up on this first slope we saw a group doing self arrest practice on a steep gully. It turned out they were members of the mountaineering training course. We kept going, heading up into a sheltered series of bowls where the sun was starting to thaw the corn and soften up the sierra cement. We kept going up another steep bowl until we got into the last big open part with a straight view of frozen Robinson Lake, and the wall of peaks blocking the basin, of which University Pk is the most prominent. We decided to stop for a break, which turned into a lunch break at the east end of the basin at about 11,000'. The breezy, balmy conditions changed into the strong hurricane force winds that accompany storm fronts crossing the sierras. There were not any good ski slopes up ahead, so we decided to head down. We had a variety of conditions from a thin layer of heavy powder on a firm base, to hard wind pack, buttery corn, to mash potatoes slop. The storm clouds were closing in so we headed back down the hill to our campground. Back at Upper Greys it was warm and spring-like. The clouds and winds seemed to stop just at the Sierra crest. We pulled out our camping lounge chairs, cracked some brews, killed a couple bottles of wine, and feasted on Tom's campfire cookery. In the morning we had decisions to make. The storm clouds were still suspended just hanging over the sierra crest. We heard weather reports of a big storm that was supposed to hit, yet where was it? Tom and the rest of the group decided to head home early and stop for a hike in the Fossil Falls area south of Olancha and just south of the Coso Road rest stop. I still wanted to ski and since it sounded like the storm was hitting up at north, I drove to June. It was snowing hard enough to cover tracks after each run. I had the whole place to myself and racked up 21,000'. Not bad for starting at 11am. On the way back the storm ended at the top of Sherwin Grade. Sardine Canyon will have to wait until next season.

(a form with a long broom stick attached). After about 4 hrs they put the capstone on the igloo and moved in. The rest of us built a kitchen with a snow wall. Evelyn, Helga and Joe and Bill went out for afternoon tours on the ridge just west of Barney Lk. Soon the sun went down and everyone cooked dinner and went to bed fairly early. The next morning it was sunny and reasonably calm. After breakfast everyone started heading up towards Duck Pass. At the top we turned right and headed along the ridge over towards the west. We toured around and looked down on Dear Lakes and Blue Couloir. After lunch some of us decided to ski down to Duck Lk and across to climb the peak on the southwest side. There was nice run down some corn snow and to get to the base of this mountain and then Joe, Helga, Evelyn and I climbed to the top, while Tom, Mike and Bill went back to base camp. The run down was heavy powder and mashed potatoes. After skiing back across Duck Lk. We had a nice run back down Duck Pass to our base camp. Wally and Craig bailed out early as Craig had to be at birthday part for his daughter on Sunday. Bill immediately moved into the igloo.

As we were changing and watching the sun set, we noticed clouds coming in from over Mammoth Mt. Soon it started snowing. With our snow kitchen we had enough room for everyone to socialize and cook. Mike pulled a plastic bottle of Schlivavitz from his jacket and passed it around, and Tom had an endless supply of paraffin wax bars that he kept stoking his wax fire with. As the snow came down stronger it started spattering the wax fire. The party moved into the igloo where it was quiet and warmer. Mike and Bill spent the night in the igloo. Joe and the Alpha Females were warm in their Megamid. The next morning there were high clouds and we did a short tour up to the pass to farm some of the powder from the previous night. Although it snowed pretty hard for a little while, it was not enough to cover the frozen corn surface underneath - about 2 inches of light dry stuff on a very firm base. It was still skiable and everyone had a decent run or two down. Evelyn did about 4 or 5 runs. I had a run down a steep slope with a thin film of dust on crust. Each turn was scraping the ice underneath. When I got to the bottom of the 3-400' slope I could see that a small slide had come slowly down behind me going right thru the middle of my tracks. It made a good picture. We then packed up and skied down our cars. Joe and the Alpha Females headed back to the Bay Area, Mike, Bill, Tom and I went back to Bill's private Hot Pool. Along the way we ran into Mike and Lorene who were out driving around looking for hot springs, so they followed us to ours. After cleaning up we headed to the Bishop Taqueria before driving the 250 miles back to LA. Another fine SMS trip in the eastern sierras. Thanks to all who participated.
